DS

I don't know why but today June 22nd 2024, I thought of my best friend when I was in fifth 6th and 7th grade. Lana was that person. We used to walk to each other's houses which is today absolute feet because it was almost 4 miles between her house and mine. We shared a lot of things. We had a pet raccoon. I loved going to her grandma's house. And during Christmas season - so pathetic now with everything - but when we were doing dishes we would play our own game of which Christmas light were we looking at and we would proceed to sound off at the particular sequence of blinking light. When I stayed over at her house they would tease me that I and Dickey liked each other.

I was the younger so when I went on vacation with my mom and dad I was often alone. And Lana would go with me. One memorable vacation was when we went to the Outer Banks of North Carolina (strange it seemed so foreign at that time and now my son and his family live there) The afternoon we arrived there was a sandstorm. We had never been near the ocean or the sand and translate thought well this is the way it is all the time. (Of course it isn't) As we were walking toward the ocean this thing jumped on my leg. I screamed, she screamed more from fear than pain... What kind of creature was attacking me?????

It was a cactus.

Again I don't know what it was that today I wondered where Lana was only too late that I find I was here without her.

If her family has reason to find this long long story please no that she was amazing and all these years later, I'm 70 now, she lives in my heart
