“ I was saddened to read of the passing of your father, William Typinski. I had "Mr T" for electronics classes for my 11th and 12th grades in the late sixties. Mr. T helped prepare me for my career in electronics from which I just recently retired. He taught me lots regarding the principles of electronics and I especially enjoyed the projects that he would read about in some electronics magazine and then bring into class so that we could study the principles of the project and then build a working model. I especially remember the wireless microphone we built for him to use in his class teaching and also the plasma speaker that we built with a propane torch, a 400 volt power supply, a radio receiver, two nails and some wire that actually worked so that we could hear the radio program program being broadcast!

I also remember him as a humble man who took his job of teaching to his students very seriously and worked hard at helping us to learn the material. I am so thankful for the effort that he invested in my life to help me learn and apply that knowledge in practical ways.
